This book is a pictorial record of the training and achievements of the 1251st ENGINEER COMBAT BATTALLION from it's date of activation in Camp Swift, Texas on 30 December 1943 to the time of compilation on 1 September 1945 at Camp Tophat, the huge re-deployment center just across the Scheldt from Antwerp, Belgium.

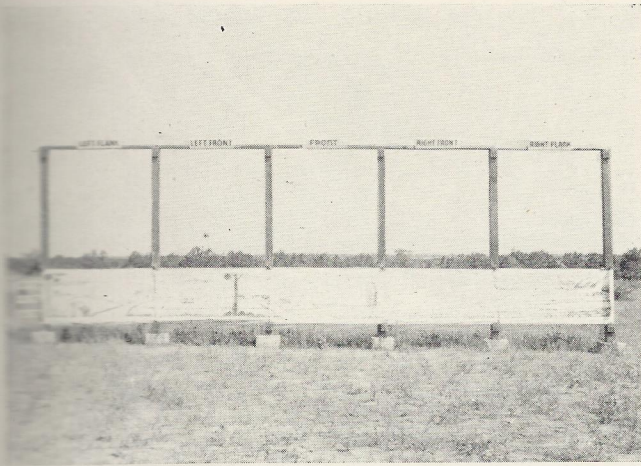

We take you on a tour of well remembered places, events, and situations, a never-to-be forgotten experience set down on black and white, which will be reviewed in later years with recollections of sweat, hardships and heartbreaks, pleasures and joys.

We have not endeavored to give you a word history of the activities of our unit, for, in your own words you can do a better job of explaining each picture as it is related to you than we could.

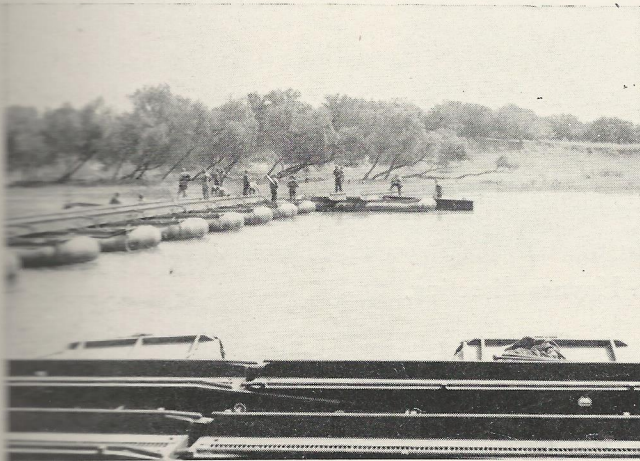

It is with gratitude that we look back on the competent leadership of the officers and non-coms of this Battalion, and with pride that we acknowledge the co-operation manifested and hard work accomplished by every man on the T/O, which has made this outfit one of the best in the ETO.

We wish to give special credit to T/5 Hassel C. Thompson, battalion photographer, to T/5 Joseph Lasker and Pfc. George Dineen, the artists and cartoonists, and to T/Sgt. Stew Gooding, manager, whose faithful and excellent work appears on these pages.

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. «A» Company tries their hand at bridge building. It looks as though they'll learn too.

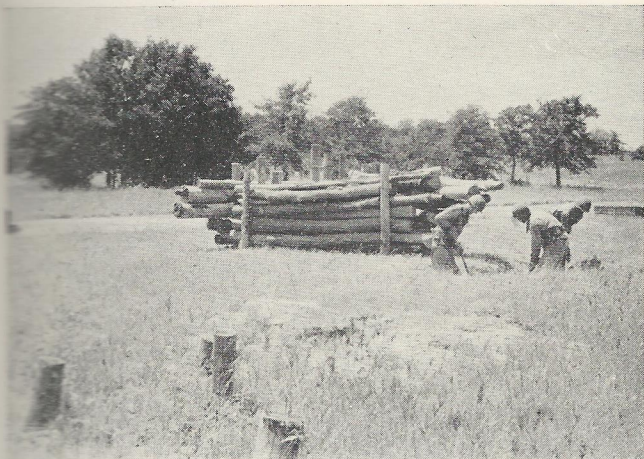

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. And the boys really sweat blood while «A» Company non-coms direct their bridge building.

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. «A» Company shows their workmanship on a finished bridge.

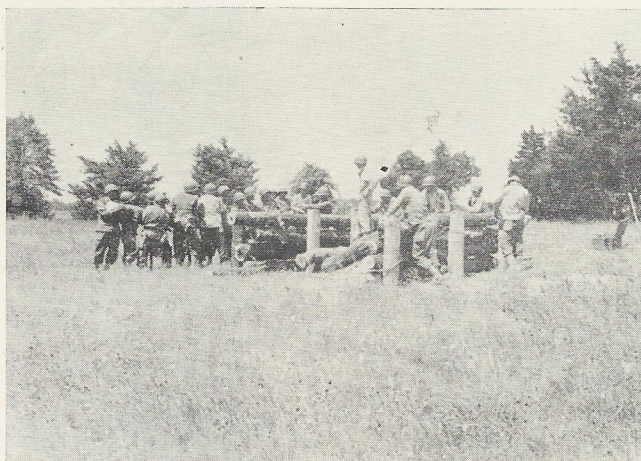

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. «A» Company's bridge even stands long enough for a jeep to pass over — no insinuations intended.

Camp Swift, Texas. 27 January 1944. «A» Company tries their hand at building obstacles.

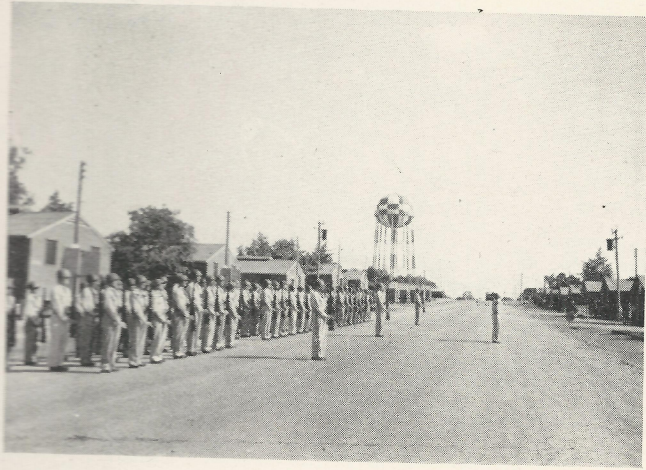

Camp Swift, Texas. 27 January 1944. An irresistible object out of the minds of «A» Company brains and privates' labor.

Camp Swift, Texas. 27 January 1944. It's a lot of work, but we think a tank wouldn't buck it.

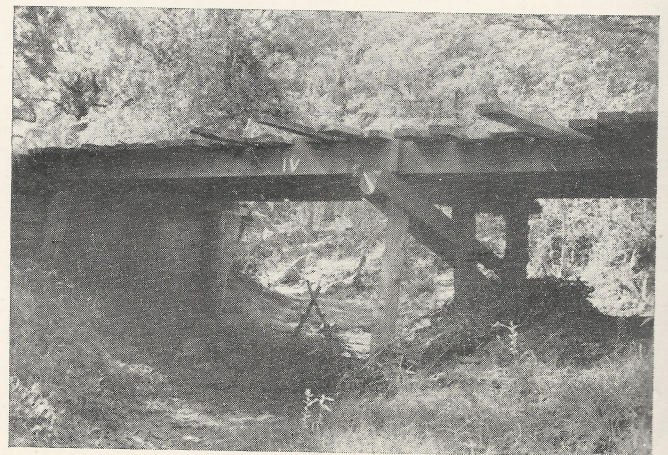

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. «B» Company stands retreat while the sun boils the fat from their fannies.

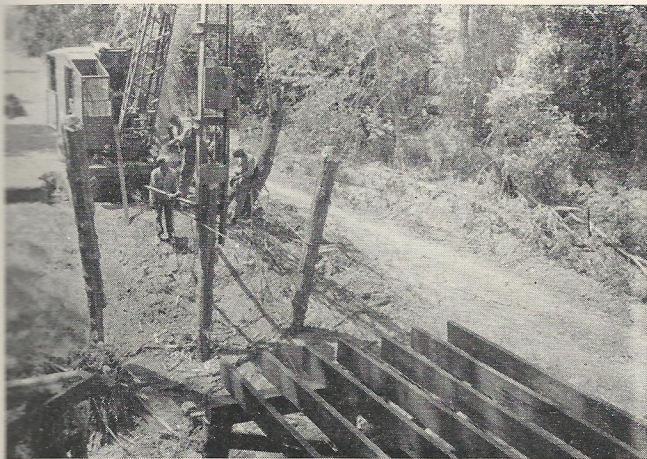

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. «B» Company men build a raft with a canvas and some tree limbs.

Camp Swift, Texas. July 1944. Construction of a wooden trestle bridge by «B» Company. It holds the men so it might hold a jeep or motorcycle.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Another wooden trestle bridge under construction by «B» Company.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Pile driver placing piles for «B» Company trestle bridge.

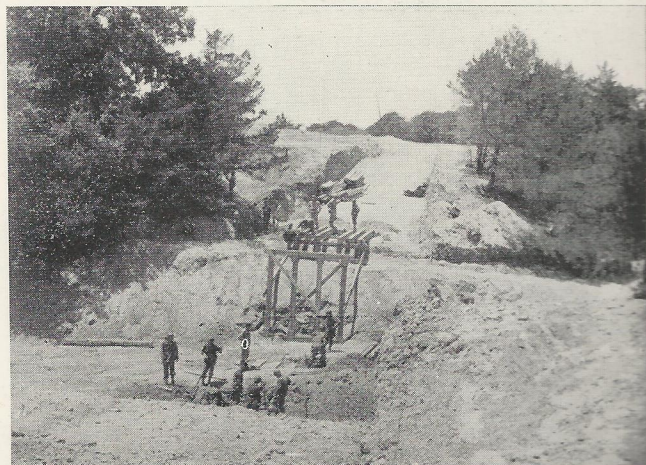

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. One bent in place on «B» Company's wooden trestle bridge.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. The boys take ten while the air compressor goes to work on the «B» Company bridge.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Excavating for second bent on «B» Company bridge. Approach to bridge and first bent in place in the background.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Things sure are rugged in bivouac areas. The medics are forced to operate — with an axe.

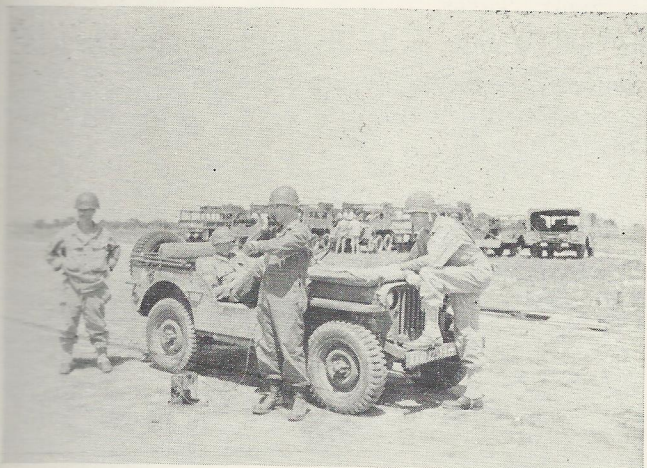

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Spans of «C» Company bridge over the little «Grand Canyon» near camp.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. In the bivouac area. Gooding taking a ten minute nap for an hour or two between working periods.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944.
Being given a little toot on the tooter by «A» Company buglers.

Camp Swift, Texas, August 1944. Even «C» Company had to stand retreat in the old days when 4 F's were civilians and the 125th was garrison.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. A wooden foot bridge built without nails. It sure had a strong imagination or else the lashings were good.

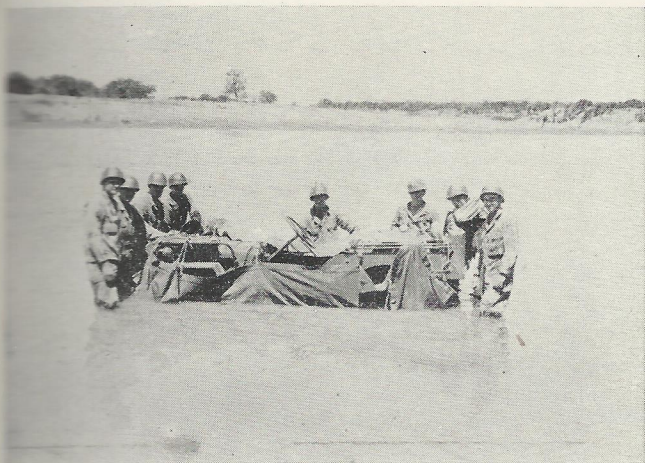

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944.
Another wooden foot bridge without nails built by «B» Company.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. Taking a jeep over the canyon on a cable. We still think it's easier to build a bridge Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. The boys decide its time to teach a jeep to swim, since it can do anything else; hence, they float one in the Colorado River.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. An infantry support bridge put across the Colorado River during basic training.

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. The guys get tired of small bridges so they build a steel ponton over the Colorado.

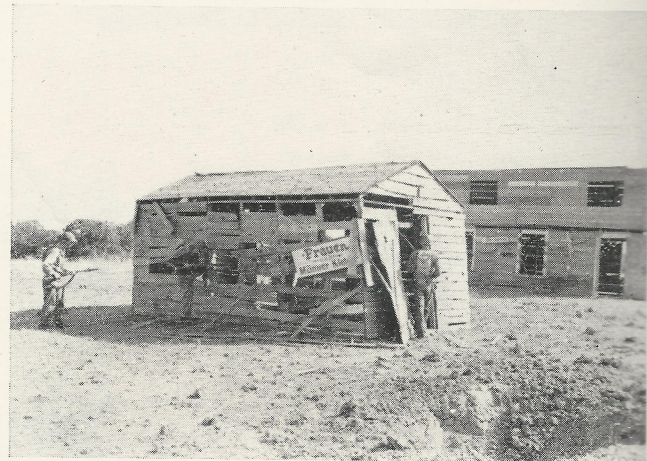

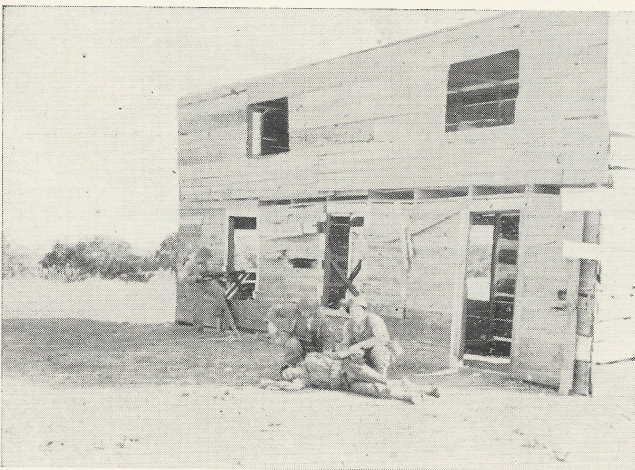

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. It looks all right so far, so it doesn't look as though we need any more practice at breaking our backs.

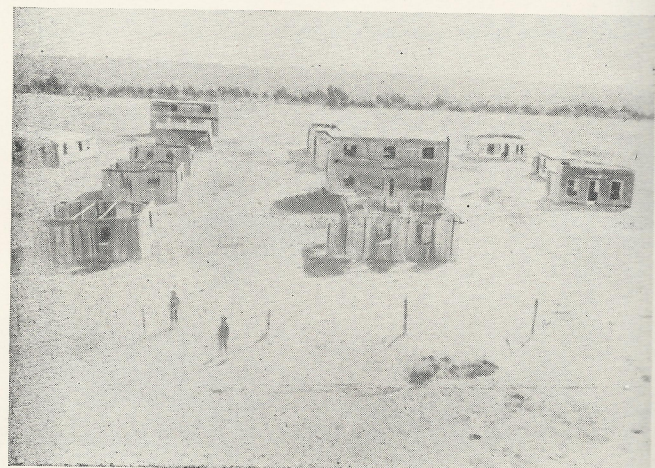

Camp Swift, Texas. August 1944. The highway bridge that dropped «A» Company's dozer, trailer and 1st. Sgt. and knocked hell out of all three.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. Typical house in German village course during training.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. The medics treat the wounded on the German village course.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. General lay-out of German village course.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. Alerted — Louie starts making boxes, which is work after the nice life in A.S.T.P.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. Even Dewie does a little work while packing. Don't let the pencil fool you, he can't write.

Camp Swift, Texas. September 1944. John and Ricardo talk over the situation. At last! No more retreat, no more reveille, no more chicken. - Oh, Yeah!

The terrain sure is taking a beating, but what it won't do to a vehicle.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. November 24, 1944.
And we got tired of our English hotel, so we tried to burn the place out.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. November 24, 1944.
The firemen really worried for a while, but decided it was just bad wiring, poured a bucket of water on the floor and went home.

it out in «H and S» Company Orderly Room.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 1, 1944. «B» Company greets Weston with a dance and beer brawl. Officers present were Lt. Griffith, Lt. Caffey, Capt. Mays, Lt. Bering, and Lt. Vackerich.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 1, 1944. At «B» Company dance the boys really went to dance and drink even if the girls' intentions were otherwise.

Weston-Super-Mare, England December 1, 1944. The wellknown cutting a rug takes place, and the couple kicking heels has no kick coming.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 1, 1944 The boys tip a few at the dance. Those well-known tipplers are Roberts, «Dutch» Steffey, and Sanles.

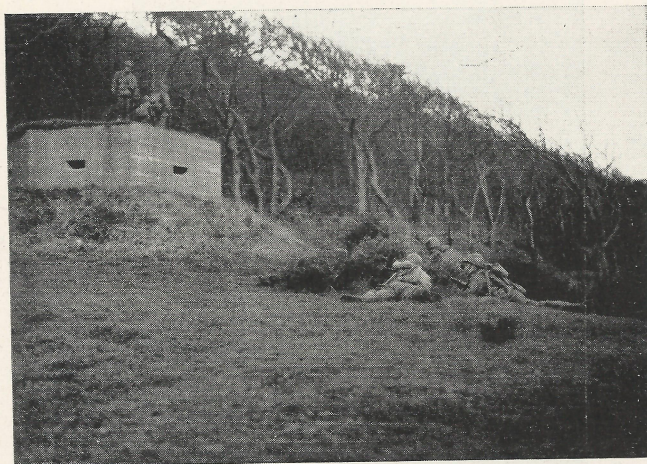

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. «C» Company readies for combat with a machine gun nest in position.

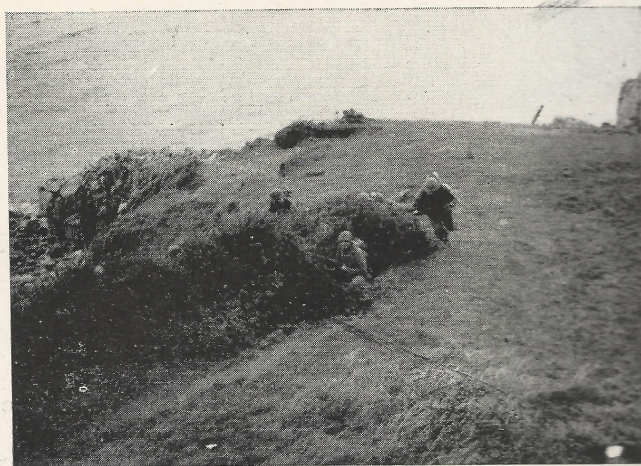

Weston-Super-Mare, England, December 5, 1944. «C» Company men scale cliffs to attack after an assault landing on a beachhead.

Weston-Super-Mare, England, December 5, 1944.

Harrassing fire on a pillbox.

Weston-Super-Mare, England, December 5, 1944.
THE ATTACK! — This really could be serious.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. After the assault landing, some «C» Company men decide their plan of action.

Weston-Super-Mare, England.
December 5, 1944. The men really sweat blood lugging those

.50's up the cliff.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. The attack on the trenches. Better pull that head in, bud.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. The defense in the form of a .50 caliber and crew.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. Inside the pill-box on the defensive side. — Those walls look plenty tough and the men seem to mean business.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 5, 1944. After that work of climbing and assimilating, a man sure can use a hot meal; and the «C» Company men look satisfied.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 6, 1944. The «C» Company men clear the beaches of Weston of mines and booby traps.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 6, 1944. The mine detectors being put to good use. — We hope there's no non-metallic mines around.

Weston-Super-Mare, England. December 6, 1944. The three musketeers find a wall to hide behind. In case you don't know them, they're Moulason, Viola and Babola.

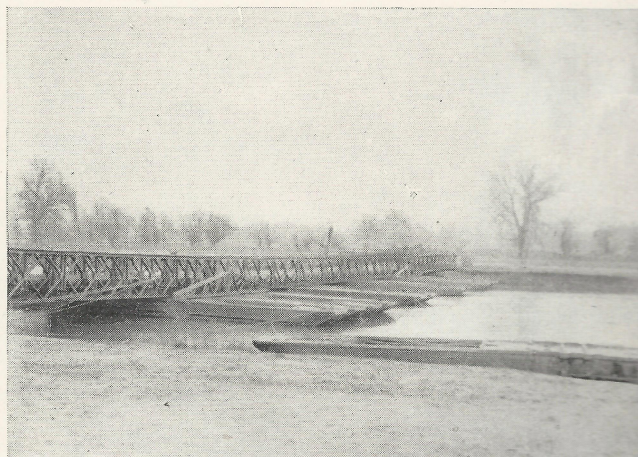

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. «A» Company goes to Bailey bridge school and learns to put up the double-single floating Bailey.

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. «A» Company's bridge ready to receive the center floating span.

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. The completed bridge. It was a tough fight, mom, but we won.

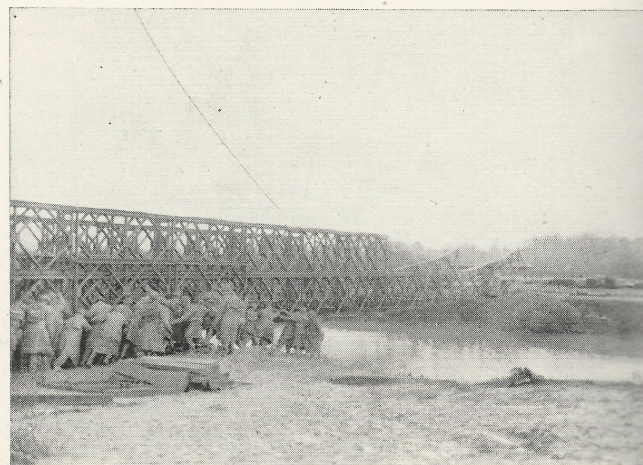

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. A front view of «A» Company's double-single floating Bailey on the Thames. We now hope it will hold a vehicle.

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. Yes — we even took a chance and ran a $\frac{3}{4}$ ton truck over it with no damage done.

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. Meanwhile, «B» Company gets a little practice at putting up a double-double Bailey bridge.

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. Lay Hold! — Heave! It sure takes a lot of push on one of these Bailey bridges, and the «B» Company men seem to have it.

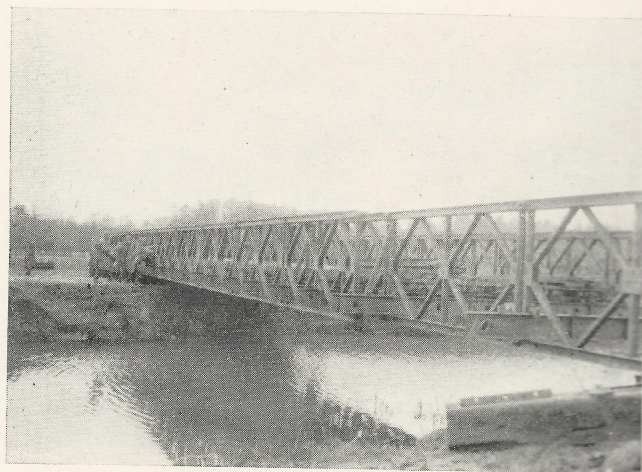

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. The boys take ten to light a pipe while putting up «C» Company's Bailey. Those goldbricking are Eiler, Miller, Beatty and Symes, and they feel as miserable as they look.

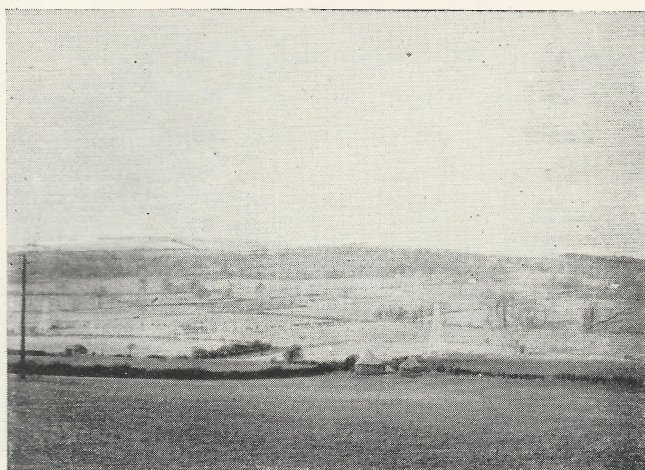

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. Another big Lay Hold! — Heave!

job while working on «C» Company's bridge.

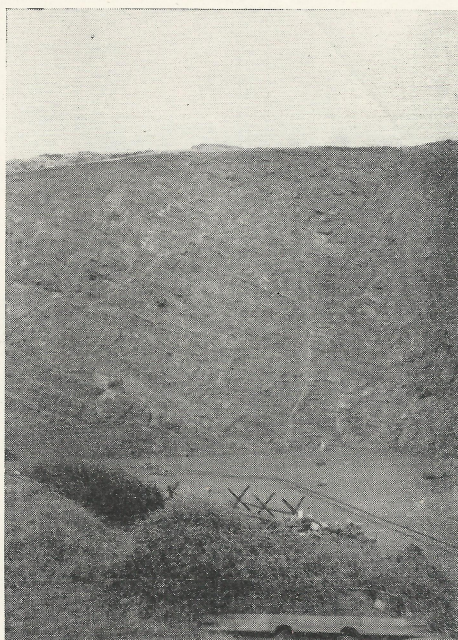

Wallingford, England. December 8, 1944. The «C» Company single-single Bailey being pushed into place. There's a lot of work and a lot of bridge on one of these jobs.
